awareness

The key challenges

AWARENESS GAP

Many consumers are familiar with the Weetabix masterbrand, but are not aware of Weetabix Protein.

RELEVANCE GAP

Protein products are often associated with gym-goers and bodybuilders rather than everyday consumers

PURCHASE GAP

Consumers may forget about Weetabix Protein when they reach the supermarket aisle or online grocery platform.

The competitor Landspace

Campaign

Core idea: Turn everyday morning struggles into humorous “Morning Monsters” then show Weetabix Protein as the trusted breakfast defence.

Build awareness: Hero video, YouTube and paid social make the campaign memorable.

Create relevance: British humour keeps protein benefit everyday, not gym-bro.

Drive purchase: Retail media, e-commerce and POS remind shoppers at the buying moment.

Persona For Consumer+Shopper

ZOE, 22
GEN Z EVERYDAY OPTIMISER

Busy, health-conscious and always looking for better choices that fit her routine.

Audience type:
CONSUMER + SHOPPER

-  22 years old
-  University student / early-career worker
-  Lives in a UK city
-  Values convenience, health, balance and affordability

"I want to eat better and get enough protein, but I don't want breakfast to be complicated."

WHO SHE IS

- 22-year-old Gen Z living in a UK city.
- Busy weekday mornings with study/work and social life.
- Values convenience, health, balance and affordability.
- Not a hardcore gym-goer, but protein is part of "better eating". (IFE, 2025)

ATTITUDES TO HEALTH & FOOD

- Health-conscious, but not extreme.
- Interested in protein, fibre and functional benefits.
- Sees protein as mainstream wellness, not just gym culture.
- Influenced by online food trends and simple high-protein swaps. (IFE, 2025)

PAIN POINTS

- Wants more protein, but many protein products feel too gym-focused.
- Morning routine is rushed and inconsistent.
- Wants to eat healthier, but does not want extra effort.

WHAT SHE WANTS FROM A PROTEIN-RICH BREAKFAST

- Quick, filling and easy to prepare.
- Healthier with protein, but not "gym food".
- Familiar taste and trusted brand.
- Worth buying, especially if it costs more than standard cereal.

Role in Campaign
Needs a clear, evidence-based reason to support the product in-store

1 WHO HE IS

- Breakfast cereal category buyer at Tesco.
- Needs to know whether Weetabix Protein fits shopper needs and strengthens the cereal category. (Tesco, 2026a)

2 WHAT HE FOCUSES ON WHEN INTRODUCING / SUPPORTING PRODUCTS

- Does it strengthen Tesco's breakfast cereal category?
- Aligned values between the brand and Tesco. (Tesco, 2026b)

3 TRADE PAIN POINT

- Every product needs a clear reason to win shopper attention and drive sales for Tesco.

4 WHAT HE NEEDS TO SEE FROM WEETABIX PROTEIN

- Proof that protein is mainstream shopper interest, not a niche fitness trend.

5 TOUCHPOINTS & MEDIA BEHAVIOUR

6 CAMPAIGN MESSAGE FOR HIM

Helping Tesco grow the breakfast category through a trusted protein choice.

Weetabix Protein

Persona For Stakeholders

Dr. Helen Morris, 42
Nutrition & Health Communications
Gatekeeper

Audience type
Stakeholder audience

Segment
Nutritionists / health journalists / lobby groups

Role in category conversation Independently evaluates food and nutrition claims, and decides whether a product or campaign is credible enough to be referenced, commented on or supported in wider health and nutrition discussions.

Who she is

- Nutritionist / health journalist / wellbeing commentator
- Follows UK food, nutrition and public health discussions
- Values evidence, transparency and responsible claims
- Can influence public opinion through expert commentary, articles or newsletters

What she cares about

- Accurate protein messaging
- Approved nutrition and health claims (GOV.UK, 2021)
- Responsible tone and consumer clarity
- Whether consumers can understand the benefit without being misled
- Supports balanced nutrition rather than hype

Stakeholder pain points

Main pain point:

She is open to healthier cereal options, but only if the message is clear, balanced and responsible.

- She is concerned about exaggerated protein benefit.
- She needs health claims to be compliant (GOV.UK, 2021).
- She does not want protein framed as a miracle solution.
- She is concerned that inaccurate claims could damage public trust.
- She is concerned that supporting weak claims could harm her own professional credibility.

What she wants to see from Weetabix Protein

- Clear wording such as "high in protein".
- Clear nutrition briefing / information pack.
- Evidence-based and legally compliant protein claims.
- Balanced explanation of product benefit.
- No exaggerated claims around strength, weight loss or health transformation.

Touchpoints and media behaviour

Paid / professional media

- Health and nutrition newsletters
- LinkedIn sponsored content
- Professional food / health media

Owned

- Brand website nutrition information
- Email

Earned

- Public health / food industry discussion
- Expert mentions in articles or newsletters
- Nutritionist commentary
- Health journalist coverage

Direct / offline

- Product information pack
- Product sampling
- Nutrition briefing
- Expert Q&A

Media behaviour

- Reads evidence-based articles and reports
- Engages in professional networks
- Shares insights via articles, commentary or newsletters

Current perception of Weetabix Protein

From Dr. Helen's point of view:

- "It could be a useful high-protein breakfast option."
- "But I need to confirm whether the protein claims are accurate and compliant."

- "The campaign must not exaggerate what protein can do."
- "I would only reference it if the information is balanced and verifiable."

Campaign message for her

Clear protein benefit.
Responsible nutrition message.

Persona For Employee

Persona 4: Mark Thompson, 38 – Employee

Audience type:
Employee audience

Segment:
Weetabix office employees

Role in internal engagement:
Needs to understand how Weetabix Protein fits the wider Weetabix brand story and feel informed, included and motivated.

7. Campaign message for him

Weetabix Protein is helping Britain defend its mornings — and every employee is part of that story.

1. Who he is

- He is an office employee.
- He wants to understand the link between the new campaign and brand heritage.
- If the campaign is clear and brand-relevant, he can become an internal supporter.

2. What he cares about

- Clear internal communication (Nadales-Gallego et al., 2025).
- The purpose of the Weetabix Protein campaign.
- How the campaign connects to “Have You Had Your Weetabix?” brand asset.

3. Employee pain points

Main pain point:

He is willing to support the campaign, but only if he understands the story and feels included.

- Campaign may feel distant if it only appears externally.
- May not understand why Weetabix Protein matters to the brand.
- May feel confused if the campaign purpose is not clearly explained (Blessing, 2013).

4. What he wants to see from Weetabix Protein

Clear internal information explaining why Weetabix Protein matters.

A clear link to “Have You Had Your Weetabix?”.

Product experience opportunity (e.g., sampling / tasting).

5. Touchpoints and media behaviour

Office employees

Internal email

Digital posters

Shared internal touchpoints

Staff Q&A

6. Current perception of Weetabix Protein

“I know this product exists, but I need to understand why it matters now.”

“I want to know how it fits into the wider Weetabix brand story.”

“If the campaign connects clearly with the brand story, I will find it easier to support.”

Creative Concept & Monster Visual System

CORE MESSAGE

Defend your morning with Weetabix Protein

A trusted high-protein breakfast for everyday chaos.

Campaign Slogan: Don't Let the Morning Monsters Win.

VISUAL SYSTEM RULES

- Cute but not childish
- Adult British humour
- Everyday morning pain points
- Pack shot always present
- Humour + protein proof

PRODUCT PROOF High in protein. 12g protein per serving.

Creative safeguard: Monsters create attention. Weetabix Protein remains the hero.

Hero Storyboard: Attack of the Morning Monsters

STORYBOARD | ATTACK OF THE MORNING MONSTERS

VO: The morning has begun...

VO: Inbox Beast detected.

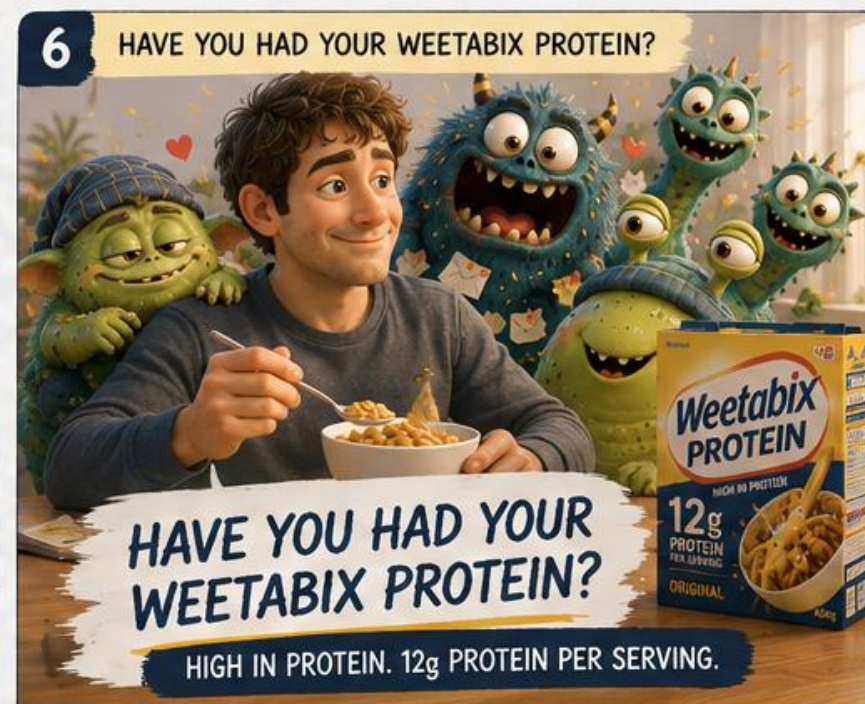

VO: Commute chaos incoming.

VO: And then... the Meeting Hydra.

VO: Before the day attacks, defend your morning.

VO: Have you had your Weetabix Protein?

PURPOSE

A funny idea that introduces the four Morning Monsters as a humorous way to show morning chaos.

CREATIVE LOGIC

The monsters create attention and recognition; Weetabix Protein appears as the trusted high-protein breakfast solution.

CLOSING MESSAGE

Don't Let the Morning Monsters Win. Defend your morning with Weetabix Protein.

Note: The story avoids “defeating” the monsters; it frames breakfast as helping the hero handle morning chaos.

Campaign Slogan & Creative Rationale

Making the Morning Monsters memorable without losing the Weetabix Protein brand

WHY THE IDEA FITS THE CLIENT BRIEF

1. Human Truth

Busy adults often feel attacked by morning chaos before the day has even started.

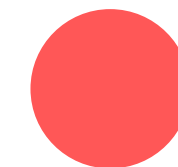

2. Creative Hook

Morning Monsters turn familiar frustrations into humorous, memorable characters.

3. Brand Fit

The tone keeps warm adult British humour and everyday breakfast world.

4. Client Fit

The idea supports awareness, engagement and purchase without moving away from Weetabix's breakfast identity.

OFFLINE RETAIL ACTIVATION

Gains for own-label cereals

When buying breakfast cereals, shoppers are price sensitive, with 62% saying rises in cereal prices encourage them to switch to cheaper breakfast cereal products. This has underpinned own-label's gain in value market share between 2023 and 2025. Manufacturers outside the top three in cold cereals also outperformed the segment.
